From the Steering Committee

So did you see Ellen? It was a very powerful feeling to hear her say she was gay. We just have to hope that the rest of the season and seasons to come, preserve the dignity of the character Ellen.

Just what does it mean to be gay today? It still seems to depend on when you came out. Young people today, at least in California, can be pretty blasé about gayness. Is it just part of what they know? Where their classmates raised by lesbians? Have the 25 years of gay pride parades and marches and gay olympics provided a "normal" tinge to being gay? Nice to think about it that way.

For those of us who came out in the late sixties and seventies, feminism may have been a part of our growth process. Many of us first said, "it's okay to be a woman," then we said, "and I'm a lesbian woman and that's okay."

And if you came out in the forties and fifties, then you have seen our culture go through so many stages, pre-stonewall butches and fems, cross dressing, the invasion of the feminists, and now, the piercing punky bi-energy of the nineties.

But just what does it mean to be a lesbian today? Well, what does it mean to be "anything" today? Say you are Italian. Some people work to retain the customs of their culture. They go to Italian festivals, they travel to Italy, they hang around with other Italians and share the stories passed down from generation to generation. And then for some Italians, their heritage has little connection to their day to day life.

And I guess, so it is, with lesbians. For some of us, we are driven to go to festivals, and travel to gay owned resorts and hang around with lesbians. For others, being lesbian, perhaps, has little connection to their day to day life, though it is hard to imagine.

There are still some lesbians filled with passion of the politics of being gay. To a lesser degree there are others who spend most of their pleasure time with lesbians, but don't create for themselves, a connection to the lesbian community. We don't feel a responsibility to support lesbian culture and lesbian and gay resources.

And the institutions in our community are struggling because of there are not enough of us with the passion and sense of responsibility to insure that our "heritage" will survive.

The Sacramento Bee printed an article this week that reported that the Lambda Center is struggling and can't pay it's bills. They are facing a significant shortfall in their operating budget.

The president, Ellen French, said that there are passionate people who support the center, but not enough to cover the deficit. She noted that more people need to feel a responsibility for the center.

It is our community, our "heritage", every lesbian is responsible, we cannot afford to lose the institutions of our community. All that we created and sustained in the past is the foundation that Ellen stepped on when she came out. It is also our future.

(This is the first part of a two-part series explaining what's been going on in Hawaii with regard to same-sex marriage. This part will tell you what's going on in Hawaii's courts. Part Two, to be published next month, will bring you up-to-date on what's been going on in the Hawaii Legislature.)

On December 17, 1990, about a week before Christmas, two lesbian couples and one gay male couple in Hawaii took the first step to give our community the most valuable Christmas present we've ever received--the right to marry our partners.

Organized by a gay activist named Bill Woods (who once co-founded the Moral Majority when it sought to establish its presence in Hawaii by himself copyrighting the name "Moral Majority--Hawaii"), Ninia Baehr and Genora Dancel, Antoinette Pregil and Tammy Rodrigues, and Joseph Melillo and Patrick Lagon, all long time residents of Hawaii, applied for marriage licenses in Honolulu.

To the surprise of no one, the Department of Health, which has the authority to issue marriage licenses in Hawaii, refused to issue licenses to the three couples on the ground that only a man could marry a woman, and only a woman could marry a man.

On May 1, 1991 the three couples, represented by Honolulu attorney, Dan Foley, took the state to court, and the case Baehr v. Lewin (Lewin was then the director of the Department of Health) was born.

The case sought a declaration that the Hawaii marriage law, as construed by the Department of Health, was unconstitutional because, among other things, it violated the equal protection clause of the Hawaii Constitution. The suit also sought to enjoin, or prohibit, the state from withholding marriage licenses from same-sex couples in the future.

The lower court, known in Hawaii as the circuit court, ruled in favor of the state, but the couples appealed the decision to the Hawaii Supreme Court, which ruled in their favor on May 5, 1993.

The Hawaii Supreme Court held that restricting marriage to opposite-sex couples may violate the equal protection clause of the Hawaii Constitution, which reads:

"No person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws, nor be denied the enjoyment of the person's civil rights or be discriminated against in the exercise thereof because of race, religion, sex or ancestry."

Marriage, the Court said, is an important civil right, and prohibiting same-sex couples from exercising that right discriminated against them on the basis of their sex. Even though men and women were treated equally (since men could only marry women and women could only marry men), by insisting that the couples be of opposite sexes, the law created a "sex-based" classification which itself was "suspect."

In order to be upheld, the court ruled, this sex-based classification had to meet a standard of "strict scrutiny." Under that standard, the state had the burden to prove that a "compelling state interest" justified the sex-based classification.

In order to give the state a chance to prove its case, the Supreme Court sent the case back to the circuit court for trial. This trial was finally held in September of 1996 before Judge Kevin Chang. By that time, the name of the case had changed to Baehr v. Miiike, because Lewin had been replaced as the director of the Department of Health by a man named Miiike.

The trial lasted two weeks. The state contended that it was justified in restricting marriage to opposite-sex couples because, among other things, it has a compelling interest in protecting the health and welfare of children. The state argued:

It is the State of Hawaii's position that, all things being equal, it is best for a child that it be raised in a single home by its parents, or at least by a married male and female."

This argument, it should be noted, is strangely out-of-sync with Hawaiian culture, which has long had a tradition called hanai. In the hanai tradition, children are often freely given by their natural parents to other people to raise. For example, a child might be given to a woman who has no children of her own, but longs for one. This tradition is still very prevalent in Hawaii. One study in 1974 showed that 30 percent of native Hawaiian families had children other than their own living in the house.

To prove its contention, the state called a number of expert witnesses who testified about child-rearing. But even the state's own witnesses admitted that studies have shown that, in general, gay and lesbian parents are as fit and loving parents as non-gay persons and couples.

In addition, the plaintiffs (the couples) called their own expert witnesses, who turned the state's argument against it by testifying that children of same-sex couples would be helped if their families received the social status and benefits derived from marriage.

After hearing all the testimony,

Judge Chang issued a decision on December 3, 1996, in which he held that the state had not carried its burden of proving that there was a compelling state interest for establishing a sex-based classification limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples.

Judge Chang said the state had failed to present "sufficient credible evidence" which demonstrated that the public interest in the well-being of children and families, or the "optimal development of children" would be adversely affected by same-sex marriage. The judge therefore issued an order against Director Miike and his agents prohibiting them from denying applications for a marriage license "solely because the applicants are of the same sex."

The three couples (and gay and lesbian people all over the United States) rejoiced at the news of the judge's ruling, and began making wedding plans. Ninia Baehr and Genora Dancel, who now live in Baltimore, greeted the news with tears in their eyes. Ninia told reporters:

"Our love made it possible for me and Genora to get through this long legal fight. I'm looking forward to our love getting us to a wedding on a mountain slope in Maui."

However, the judge stayed his order, i.e., suspended it from going into effect immediately, so that the state could appeal his decision back to the Hawaii Supreme Court.

The state has appealed the decision, and the process of filing written briefs arguing the case to the Supreme Court has begun. No one knows exactly how long it will be before the Court issues its final decision, but the couples' attorney, Dan Foley, expects the decision to be made by the end of 1997 or early 1998.

Based on the decision of the Supreme Court in Baehr V. Lewin, it is anticipated that the Hawaii Supreme Court will uphold Judge Chang's decision that the Hawaii marriage statute restricting marriage to opposite-sex couples is unconstitutional, and will order the state to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

However, although the outcome of the case seems assured, things are happening in the Hawaii legislature which may change that result. (Stay tuned for Part Two next month.)

SACWN SAYS.....

IS SWING COMING BACK?

The latest word from San Francisco is that swing dancing is coming back. Remember touching, swirling and spinning. Makes me dizzy, but it's a possibility!

SCOPE INFO...

Now don't hold me to this, but SACWN was contacted for a possible full page ad from a producer of women's activities in Los Angeles who is trying to put together something special for the Labor Day weekend. Those of you who miss going to the Yosemite Women's Comedy and Music Festival as our last fling of summer should find this interesting. It's likely to be a "Land Cruise" - all of the fun of a cruise but at a Northern California resort destination. Interesting? If you can't wait, she promised to call me by May 20th, otherwise look for an ad in the June newsletter.

SO WHERE'S THE SUCCESSFUL SACWNITE COLUMN?

While SACWN loves to feature a subscriber in each issue and we know you love reading about her, we have come down to begging and pleading with women to let us interview them for the column. So, if you want more SACWNite interviews, we need your help. Call Sandy with ideas of women who should be featured. Volunteer to be interviewed yourself. It takes about 30 minutes and we borrow a photograph to be returned unharmed. We even send you extra copies of the newsletter for mailing to friends. Painless, fun and it feels good afterwards! Call the SACWN office at 451-8034 and say yes!
